

Empirically derived conceptual relations between the flow in Croatan Sound and the wind field and water level fluctuations were obtained. Before proceeding to a discussion of the times series and analyses of the data, the forcing functions of the flow field and the theoretical basis for the analyses are discussed. Subsequently, conceptual and statistics based interpretations of the data are presented.